CORE VALUES

A photograph of a welder in a distillery. The welder, wearing a dark long-sleeved shirt, safety glasses, and a large, worn leather apron, is focused on welding a large metal structure. Bright sparks are visible from the welding process. In the foreground, a large, dark wooden barrel with metal hoops is partially visible. The background shows the interior of a distillery with various equipment and structural elements.

There are more than 2,000 distilleries across the United States. Many are union shops, where workers have helped create a variety of spirits and were among the first to secure labor protections in the industry.
